Edinburgh, oh Edinburgh!

UNEASE in Edinburgh over the direction being taken in recent planning decisions is reaching a critical level.

As one articulate critic puts it: "Edinburgh is becoming a ragbag of architectural blunders. The like Sugar House Close. The soulsapping mediocrity of Caltongate continues under another name. The glass cliff known as the Omni centre is an aesthetic atrocity"

Now the plans for an American what might fairly be described as

In happier times the city appeared, if not to welcome, at least to respect the contribution of informed architectural critics. What is deeply worrying about the present situation is that what appears almost to be a gungho attitude seems to rule, where informed criticism is dismissed with debate an attitude approaching contempt.

Puzzlingly, this approach seems to have the tacit approval of bodies that might previously have been expected to raise concerns.

In past times a healthier and more robust local press provided a forum for informed discussion of student ghetto vogue spawns horrors matters such as these, but facing catastrophic circulation falls and savage staff cuts, Edinburgh's morning and evening papers face a struggle to survive, let alone take up a campaigning stance.

In the circumstances it is not pension fund backed hotel on the old surprising that there is a body of St James's Centre site are provoking resistance growing up to what is perceived as a very worrying trend.

The feeling is gaining ground that the capital's very status as international architectural treasur is now under serious threat.

Only benefit can come from a vigorous airing of the issues.

Anyone who cares about our architectural heritage and our built future needs to get involved in the

Richard Carr wonders if the new V & A building for Dundee is going 'to do a Holyrood'?

SO, THE TRUTH has finally come out: an independent enquiry led by John McClelland, formerly chairma of Rangers Football Club, into the construction costs of the V&A Museum of Design in Dundee (the third of its various appellations), has found that there was always 'little prospect' of the building being completed to its original budget of £27million (though it is understood the original figure was probably much lower than that).

"As the design moved forward," McLelland says, "it became apparent that the technical requirements and construction method involved would put real pressure on the budget." But, he says, the company set up to run the project by Dundee City Council, Dundee's two universities, Scottish Enterprise and the Victoria & Albert Museum in London, never acknowledged that there was a 'serious mismatch' between the budget and the 'elite design' by the Japanese architect, Kengo Kuma.

His design envisaged the museum being projected from its site next to the RRS Discovery so that it 'floated' on the River Tay, and many critics of the project (this paper included) doubted that, given the complexity of the design, the museum could be built for a budget that had then risen to £45million

Then, five years ago, Dundee City Council took over responsibility for building Kenzo Kuma's design. The building was pulled back from the river in an attempt to cut costs. But, even then McLelland says, the council failed to scrutinize the project properly, so that the final cost now stands at £80million.

The council also failed to integrate the building into its 'normal work' with the result that it failed to appoint 'a single accountable project manager' meaning, McLelland says, that there was 'ambiguity' about responsibility. In addition, construction became three vears behind schedule and the museum what was being built. is not expected to open until 2018.

What has happened in Dundee echoes what happened when the Scottish Parliament in Edinburgh was being built. Then, another foreign architect, Enric Miralles, was appointed to build an equally elaborate and complicated design whose cost rose from the original £45million (which critics pointed out was the cost of a typical supermarket shed) to the final bill of £430million

What was remarkable about the Scottish Parliament was that, after Miralles's death his widow was able to bring the building to completion. And, what showed how little Scottish MSPs took responsibility for a building

There is one other factor that is going to affect both the Scottish Parliament and the V&A Museum of Design: maintenance. Because of its differently angled roofs and windows and the irregularity of its floor plan, the Scottish Parliament is proving very expensive to look after, and the same will certainly be true of the V&A Museum of Design.

So, if there are any lessons to be learned (a favourite justification for investigations into past mistakes, as if to guarantee that the same mistakes will not be made again), it is that maintenance costs should be assessed when selecting an architectural design. Had this been done, it is almost certain that less complicated and less expensive designs would have been chosen for both the Scottish Parliament and the design museum ir Dundee.

This is Your Leader speaking..... THERE IS something worrying Scotland are all too often less than

about the continuing spat between the SNP - and particularly former First Minister Salmond – and the BBC

We are told that Mr Salmond held off attacking the BBC and in particular their political correspondent while he was undergoing treatment for cancer. Very decent of him. Now Mr Robinson is deemed fit again the gloves can come off and we can learn what the problem is. Or can we? What seems to be bugging Mr Salmond is a reference to the Royal Bank possibly threatening to quit Scotland. Blaming the ref is the oldest game in the book, but the grounds for this attack seem slender indeed And what on earth is the good Mr Salmond planning to replace the Beeb with north of the Border? Where are all those highly talented. fearless broadcasters we are not hearing from at present?

Without putting it too brutally, the offerings of the present BBC

Camperdown revived

A POP-UP tearoom in neo-Classical Camperdown House, Dundee during the summer has proved an unexpected success, such that the local council is hoping to lease the house as a potential hotel, restaurant or gallery in the future, Camperdown, designed by William Burn and completed in 1828, was formerly the ancestral seat of Admiral Duncan. Viscount Camperdown fought against a Dutch fleet in October 1797.

Edinburgh-based DTZ has been appointed to market the building. Tellingly, given the fiasco of funding the V&A Museum of Design (see this page), the council says that financial stability is a 'key driver' of any future use, and that 'any proposal should at least break even overwhelming.

Are there really hordes of fearless investigative broadcasters waiting in the wings to tell us it like it REALLY is?

The suspicion is bound to be that what Mr Salmond and his pals really want is a feeble, compliant rubber stamping body that would function as an extension to the very slick PR body that operates behind Nationalist lines at present.

(Yes, the one that gives us endless posed photographs of Our Great Leader in all the public prints, day after day.)

Anyone who was lucky enough to see the award winning You've Been Trumped will remember the chilling scene where filming was stopped by the police. the director was questioned for several hours and his film was held by them for a week, all for asking some pertinent questions of the then acceptable Mr Trump.

Do we really want that to become commonplace here?

on a long-term financial basis.<sup>3</sup> The house, distinguished by inner corridors that could be used by servants and prevent them from being seen, has for many years sought a new use. Its grounds have now become a country park that contains a wildlife centre that holds events across the year. Close by is a city-owned golf course.

Perhaps the best use for the Camperdown, who won the Battle of house might be as an up-market hotel, given the proximity of the golf course and the ease with which parking could be provided.

Whatever happens, there should be a museum dedicated to the Battle of Camperdown, since so much is known about what took place and there is lots of material relating to both the battle and Admiral Duncan.

Fifty shades of Gray's

A graduate of Aberdeen's celebrated school of art is making his mark in lino, woodcut and etchings

GROWING UP in the sprawling metropolis of badan, a city of three million people, Nigerian born urtist Ade Adesina had no idea that one day his work rould be on show in the privileged environs of Eton ollege. It's all thanks to his journey to Aberdeen d attending Gray's School of Art that the young artist's passion has been ignited and his work is now lourishing Adesing graduated from Grav's in 2012 and it vas having work in the this year's Royal Academy mmer exhibition that led to the country's ourite school for prime ministers calling him in. With three solo shows next year and his n residency and exhibition at Eton, it looks ke Adesina's star is firmly in the ascendant.

His work has already been seen in a number galleries, including The Gallery at Fifty Five. onehaven, the Woodend Barn Gallery in Banchory nd the Peacock Centre in Aberdeen. He was also artist in residence at the Glasgow Print Studio in Working mainly in etchings, linocut and oodcut, sometimes his work calls for painstakingly ong hours. One such piece took him more than even months to complete. It measures some 180 by 0 centimetres.

Adesina loves living in Aberdeen for its etness and solitude.

"I had to move from London. It was just too uch going on, there was always someone's party oing on – just too many distractions. I always knew I wanted to be an artist – and studying art was y way forward," the 35 year old father said. He first contemplated going to Duncan of rdanstone in Dundee after being offered a place here the same year as at Gray's, but the fact that he had a friend farther north in Aberdeen persuaded m to choose the granite city.

He loved every bit of studying at art school: was such a refreshing change, When I was in Nigeria I studied political science and finance, but I was bored very quickly of these subjects and they didn't seem to get me anywhere."

His work, predominantly black and white etchings, covers many contemporary issues, including images of wind turbines, the scourge of many countryside and peace lovers. As he explains himself: "My work is a visual and Germany, immersing myself in different cultures and collecting a variety of imagery to use in my next body of work.

"I enjoy researching and visualising the differences between countries both historically and culturally. My ideas come from the new places I've visited and I source information from documentaries and current affairs."

When he is not working on his art works, he looks after his 18 month old daughter, Zelda and also manages to find time to stack a few shelves on the night shift at Asda.

Of his work 'Disengage' he says: "It is all about the environment in general. There was a lot of controversy about nuclear power and I try to portray the different options. I try not to get too involved in politics. I was in the middle for the whole Scotland referendum question.'

beginning of the millennium, there have been problems on the land. 'In Land' also reveals how artists respond to alterations in the traditional countryside and in farming practice. From mixed media visitors may see how life has changed with, for example, the disappearance of scything, hand-winnowing, haystacks, barley sheaves and cart-horses and the appearance instead of tractors, combine harvesters, milking parlours and these days in the fields, those giant cylindrical bales that look as if a mechanical dinosaur has dropped its excrement from the sky.

It is a forum for talks and discussion on farming in the southwest. On October 3 there will be a discussion with four speakers, including Wilma Finlay of Cream o' Galloway Dairy Products on the panel.

This event, along with other talks, lectures and workshops, should appeal to all ages and provide a platform for those with an interest in farming, its people, animals and the environment.

More than anything else, the exhibition is designed to stimulate ideas through its visual art and examples of social history.

"In Germany here are no young people in the villages and here with only a small population it is not an empty space there are so many nings you can do!

Much of Wilhelm's work takes the form of moving images. Why?

"It is the medium of our time. Ideas are more important than ne medium," he declares "Ideas for an artwork often work like a story. It gets you on an intellectual level and at the same time you have to speak to your soul and your nind on an emotional and spiritual level

Not so much a trudge as a triumph

THE OBSERVER cast the 2015 Venice Biennale as "more of a glum trudge than an exhilarating dventure. For this isitor at least iust returned rom it (to the Far North of Scotland). it was anything out a 'glum Futures is not so much a theme as an attempt to create a focus. Many artists have taken it quite iterally and we witness a huge creative comment on the political and social mess the world is in. And it works.

Many of the works leave you literally gasping for breath as you realise the enormity of the message being conveyed

If you are still planning to go, do not miss Taryn Simon, Richardo Brav and a host of others in the Palazzos and Warehouses in the city Iran and Iraq are worth a look and I loved Mongolia and a show, SELF tucked away in a nearly inaccessible corner of Cannareggio.

After August you will have missed ome of the best, out on St Giorgio Maggiore – Magdalena Abramovicz wonderful powerful presences, the Bischofberger Finnish Glass collection, and some staggeringly powerful marble heads by Janne Plensa.

Among my favourites is a sculptor from Mongolia, who, in the genuine spirit of the Nomad, makes portable vurt-like constructions and erects them, as spaces for meditation, in astonishing places like The Gobi Desert, or the beach at the Hook of Holland, where, what seems to be every dog in Holland, in spite of their owner's shouts, wants to be part of the art work! Hilarious.

Thursday 3 to Sunday 27 September 2015

Though David Forster's landscape paintings show real, often very ordinary places, the mood and lighting are entirely invented.

SHARON QUIGLEY

Thursday 1 to Sunday 25 October 2015

In painting, the body: its multitude of functions and its relationship with the material properties of paint, are main concerns in Quigley's work.
