Galloway's Rhins have it...

Hidden away in the far south west of Scotland, on a 25 mile long peninsula that reaches towards Northern Ireland, Mary Gladstone.

THERE'S St IVES and Kirkcudbright, both artists' communities from the last century, but where, if at all, can you find their 21st century counterpart?

I'd put my money on a well-kept secret and advise anyone interested to head South-West to the Rhins of Galloway. Within the past decade "artists, musicians and writers, have moved here and it's become a vibrant community," says Jane Fraser, an artist from Kirkmaiden in the South Rhins.

This 25 mile long peninsula juts out from the Wigtown District of Dumfries & Galloway, extending from the North's Milleur Point to the Mull of Galloway, the southernmost point of Scotland. The word, Rhins, derives from Na Rannabh, meaning 'points of headland' in Gaelic.

Bounded in the West by the North Channel, separating Scotland from Northern Ireland and by Luce Bay in the East, the Rhins act as a breakwater against the North Channel and Atlantic winds.

"It's remarkable," says Glenda Waterworth, who moved to Drummore five years ago. "We get the sea reflected on both sides of the peninsula and it acts like a giant mirror." Added to this, are expansive skies. "You can't paint sea-scapes without large skies," Glenda adds.

The low-lying Rhins is offset by the Galloway hills in the distance and unlike some mountains of the Lake District and the Highlands, they don't hide the light. In 2016, when Linda Irving, an artist in felt, visited the Rhins, she saw an old blacksmith's smithy for sale and within 10 weeks, she had bought the property and moved in. The sea is important for her -- "It behaves differently on either side" --- and the changing light.

The colours of the field outside her studio alter according to the seasons: brown after ploughing, green with interesting markings made by agricultural machinery in summer and yellow later. Added to seasonal change, is the weather. Storms, heavy clouds and dark seas with sunny intervals. At this time of the year, it's the clarity of the light that's compelling after the summer haze.

Life in the Rhins is worlds away from Linda's former routine as an art psychotherapist when she worked in hospitals and Styal women's prison (Cheshire) with patients suffering drug and alcohol problems and those who self-harmed.

Art school-trained, with a Master's degree, Linda sees herself as a colourist and abstract artist. However, when she began work in art therapy, she discovered that patients responded well to activities involving touch, which gave her the idea of working in felt. "Physical contact is rare. They tend only to be touched when being restrained." Transformation comes when they're given the chance to handle fibre or wool and 'play'

Linda Irving at work in her studio with it.

Linda must distinguish between her personal work and a need to earn a crust. One reason for settling in the Rhins was to sell her artwork from her premises. Each year huge numbers of visitors pass her studio on their way to the Mull of Galloway lighthouse. "Inspired by the Galloway scenery, I exhibit cards, felt vessels, bags, hats, scarves, flowers and felt-making kits, which are virtually a workshop in a box."

Maybe it's unsurprising that Jane Fraser likes wood. She grew up in South Ayrshire where her father was a foreman forester on the Glenapp estate near Ballantrae. She uses a lathe to make objects in unseasoned wood picked up from the beach or from woods or acquired from Logan Botanical Garden.

Her bowls are ornamented by freehand pyrography (images burned on to the wood's surface). "Wood is my canvas, pyrography my paintbrush," she explains. Favouring hawthorn because of its grain and irregular shape, Jane is intrigued by unseasoned wood with its twists and cracks that appear as it dries.

This month, as artist-in-residence at the Creative Stranraer hub (see last ArtWork), Jane displays her singular talent as a portraitist in her show, 'Well-kent faces o' Stranraer'. Her sketches of a cafe-owner, art teacher, a baking family and picture-framer (among many others) are the result of ridding herself of her preoccupation with detail and 'freeing-up'.

When Glenda Waterworth moved to Drummore, she missed the large studio in her previous house but compensated by going out each morning with her director's chair to sketch the Scar rocks in Luce Bay and climb the hill to draw the Isle of Man coastline.

As an abstract artist, Glenda has found a route towards her atmospheric land and seascapes through an internal and external approach. She keeps art journals, in which she records random ideas, relying on her intuition with little thought towards an outcome.

The Waterworths have several strings to their bow. Glenda and her husband are experts in IT and web design but have been constrained recently in their creative work by the Covid lockdown, illness, family bereavement and no appreciable studio to work in until the end of this year, Glenda is ready to step up, not only in her painting but in dyeing. She works with natural dyes using indigo and eucalyptus leaves and has learned book-binding and made marbled end-papers.

There's a strong sense of community here, not only between these artists but with other craftspeople like silversmith Gaby Reynolds, who exhibited with Linda, Jane and Glenda this summer at Kirkcudbright's Harbour Cottage Gallery.

In a similar way to individuals in other artists' colonies, the Rhins creatives support each other. Glenda has designed Linda and Jane's web-sites and dyes fibre for Linda's felt-making. Apart from featuring their work annually in Dumfries & Galloway's Spring Fling open doors scheme, they encourage creativity in the community by running workshops and teaching artistic skills. Linda exhibits local artists' artwork in her gallery.

So, what have these artists to lose on the Rhins? For my money, they've got the edge on St Ives. No crowds and a lovely, mild climate that easily competes with Cornwall.

Forty years on – thanks to you!

THIS ISSUE of the paper completes our fortieth year of unbroken publication.

For this we have to thank a whole of raft of supporters, our writers, our printers, our lend-a-handers and, most of all, our very loyal advertisers, a very select few of whom have been in virtually every issue from the start.

As well, of course, we have to thank you, the reader, for confirming our strongly held belief that print is not dead and that not all communications need to be controlled by uncontrollable mega corporations based far from these shores.

Missing among the list of those we have to thank – very fortunately as it has so often turned out – are the names of Creative Scotland, their predecessors the Scottish Arts Council, and indeed virtually all state or even local government bodies. Can they not have liked some of our cheeky editorial

Musk-Sunak fantasy land

THE SIGHT of our Prime Minister, Mr Sunak, sitting at the feet of ‘the world’s richest man’ and being lectured by him on the future of everything was not a particularly edifying one.

Even more nauseating was the knowledge that the world’s press – or at least a good few of them – were sitting silently taking it all in, having disgracefully agreed to allow Mr Musk to escape any questioning from the floor.

Even the tv cameras were being manned by No 10 goons.

Among questions that might have come from the floor were some rather sceptical ones about one of Mr Musk’s pet projects – the so-called ‘driverless’ car.

In the one area where so called ‘robotaxis’ have been generally permitted to operate the experience has not been a particularly happy one.

Traffic in the North Beach area of San Francisco was brought to a standstill recently

Up in ‘Cloud’ cuckoo land?

THE INJUNCTION to “think before you print this” appended to so many on line communications might benefit from a little more scrutiny.

There is an assumption behind this appeal that somehow all online activity – searching, streaming or downloading data is somehow squeaky clean in environmental terms and comes at virtually no cost to the planet.

Very helpful in spreading this belief is the very cosy terminology employed. All your information – and everyone else’s – is being stored in ‘the Cloud’, this fluffy entity somewhere up there in stratosphere.

Umm? Well – not really.

content? Surely not?

It has, of course, been a matter of policy never to apply to any of these bodies for support – apart from anything else there are far worthier causes out there,

(The odd crumb of advertising support could have been welcome, if only because, with a print run greater than the stated sales of Scotland’s two ‘serious’ newspapers, we might have been thought a fairly efficient way to reach practitioners and readers interested in the arts.)

As regards the more general issue of state support for the arts, it must be a matter of some uncertainty whether the recent promises made by the First Minister will endure, or whether in months to come, there will be further giddy U-turns on support for the arts like those we have seen in the recent past.

Watch this space – and with your most generous support – keep reading these pages!

when as many as ten of the driverless cabs ground to a halt together.

The city’s fire department reported on numerous incidents in which the ‘wonder’ robocabs interfered with vehicles responding to 911 emergency calls.

Another report from the USA told of a pedestrian being dragged underneath a driverless car on a pedestrian crossing.

The odd question from the floor on incidents such as these might have been fruitful – as also might have been the odd question about the direction being taken by Twitter after Mr Musk morphed it into X and abandoned most control of its harmful content.

And how about the wholesale raiding of intellectual content by the operators of artificial intelligence systems?

Our Prime Minister may have been taken in by all this futuristic froth, but the assembled hacks should have had none of it.

You very rarely, if ever, see one portrayed photographically, but the so-called ‘Cloud’ is in fact made up of a massive array of energy and water gobbling server farms always well hidden from public sight.

The quantities involved are truly mind boggling, in some cases consuming these resources on a small nation scale.

Appeals made to artificial intelligence are especially greedy in terms of both power and cooling water consumption.

Think before you print? Yes, and maybe time to think again?

Head in the Cloud(s)?

What should we do about Gaza?

ArtWork columnist Maxwell Macleod forsakes his usual ‘flippant’ style and exceeds his annual allocation of tear shedding to agonise on the fate of Gaza’s ‘imprisoned population, of whom fifty per cent are under eighteen’.

WHAT should we be doing about Gaza?

This is not going to be an essay in my normal flippant style. I don’t cry much, maybe once a year, but the other evening I found myself weeping at some of the stories coming out of the land that I love.

You see in the past few years I have visited the Holy land on many occasions, usually doing a favour for a philanthropist pal of mine who asked me to go and do due diligence on some charity he was considering giving cash to.

I’m good at this. I know about charities and as a freelance journalist I know how to charm and hassle until I find the truth, and in war truth is always the first casualty. My philanthropist friend paid the expenses, I write a few stories, I’m story teller not a reporter or a political analyst. They have a terrible joke there that if you meet someone who says they understand what’s going on in the Middle East they are either a liar, a fool or being paid. Or all of the above.

And these stories I write – are they a waste of time? Are they too ridiculous to be bothered with? Yes, usually. Most are ignored when I put them online. But sometimes. I make a dent on the internet and they are circulated around the world – or even make the papers.

There have been two in particular. One was called The Dance of Defecation, and the second Rat Diplomacy.

Let me not dwell on the former. My point was, and this has been in circulation round the world for years, that there is one thing that is common in all the wars I have ever witnessed and that is that people often dance as they defecate as they run.

It’s not a very nice image, but war is always awful and even senior officers on reading it have admitted that they too have so danced. And they have been glad to see the nature of terror illustrated. I have met many thousands of soldiers. Most loath war. Most have either danced or feared they might.

Then there was rat diplomacy. I had gone to Romalha to interview a senior official in Fatah knowing it was going to be a waste of time as he would just rattle out the official policy that I could have got online, and had managed to steer the conversation round to a rat I had in my attic.

It was like lighting the blue touch paper. Most of the cabinet had stories about rats. Most had lived in terrible accommodation in refugee camps, their stories went on for hours. Everybody hates rats. Every Palestinian seemed to have endured them at one stage in their lives.

So what should we do about Gaza? What should we do about the grotesque obscenity that we are witnessing with an imprisoned population of two million, with around half of them being under eighteen, being blanket bombed?

And our leaders refuse to protest, or talk nonsense about the strategic necessity of bombing an imprisoned population of whom fifty per cent are under eighteen.

What do we do about the nation of Israel being still so traumatised by their history that they are acting like lunatics, because if there is one thing that is sure it is that their current policies will never lead to the abolition of Hamas and will only fertilise the hatred.

I say I only cry every year or so. I have cried twice in the last few days. Once was at the news and the other was from reading a letter from an old Palestinian friend, well into his seventies, who wrote that he had spent his life trying to build bridges and now had no idea where to start building more. I love this man. I’m glad I cried.

Last two stories: I once hussed my way into Tony Blair’s office in Jerusalem, and as I was being thrown out I asked how Mr Blair was. “Well he’s been crying a lot,” said the official with a sigh.

And a final one. I know a book shop in East Jerusalem where they managed to get hold of the first fifty copies of a new book by my neighbour Jo Rowling and they decided to sell them on a first come first served basis.

Three hours before dawn there was a queue of Arabs and Jews all standing shoulder to shoulder telling tales to each other of how much they loved Harry Potter.

What do we do about Gaza? Well, I tell you what I am going to do: I’m going to continue to tell tales of how people defecate when they run when they are terrified. Of how we share a humanity that hates rats, and loves silly stories about magicians.

And I shall continue to cry beyond my annual ration, continue to promote art, and literature and to take up the search for bridges on behalf of my friend, because it may not be much, but it’s all I can do.

And I shall continue to pray for the peace of Jerusalem.

STANLEY SPENCER GALLERY,

WE'RE SITTING outside Railtons saleroom in Wooler, surrounded by garden ornaments, Belfast sinks, bicycles, and panelled doors. Coming up to its tenth anniversary, it was the bus on the job, including time in their Bond Street salerooms. With his patch running between Leeds and Edinburgh, he spotted a gap in the market and the opportunity to work for himself.

station. Now it's one of a handful of independent country town auction houses.

Jim Railton came to auctioneering by way of Scottish Opera, theatre in Ulverston, and helping establish Northumberland Theatre Company, working in schools before taking on the Playhouse in Alnwick.

Then came time as a valuer with Phillips Auctioneers where Jim learnt

Taking on a farmhouse near Alnwick with plenty of barns, he undertook house-clearances and set up sales in appealing, spacious venues, like Chillingham and Brancepeth castles. Escalating transport costs led to his current base in Wooler where, as you'd expect, a Railtons sale has all the drama, panache and excitement of good theatre.

Jim fishes a 'piscatorial' out of his pocket. It's a delicate angler's spinner, made in Switzerland. Rare, certainly, and of potential high value to the right buyer. Putting auctions on-line has made a huge difference, dramatically increasing the size and sometimes the value of the market. Getting the call to undertake a clearance gets the adrenalin going - you never know what you'll find! One such moment was a painting by Victorian artist Atkinson Grimshaw, best known for nocturnes, cityscape, and atmospheric dockside scenes. It made more than £ 100,000, possibly a better price than a London auction-house, because of provenance, local connections and other intangible qualities that give cachet. Jim explains that the story behind the piece can make all the difference - who owned it, where it came from. Over the years he's developed a sense for the unusual and potentially valuable. If he doesn't have the specialist knowledge himself, and he usually has, he knows who does. That said, he claims, modestly, that he's just in the recycling business. Not an easy calling, as I realise when, walking into the saleroom, we're confronted by piles of paraphernalia, like flotsam and jetsam washed up by the tide, waiting to be identified, valued, photographed and catalogued ahead of the next sale. Over a thousand lots, freighted with memory, use, and hopefully, value. Lovingly made, bought, cared for and used. Soon they'll have appreciative new owners. If not, 'disposal'. Don't ask!

A ceramic curse on war

Nick Jones leaves his perch on Hadrian's Wall and his thoughts on borders to visit a ceramic artist with a powerful message for peace

I'M SITTING on Hadrian's Wall, looking down on Sycamore Gap, my ArtWork press pass round my neck. It's cordoned off, there are lots of officials peering about and, towards the Roman Road, a blue flashy light winks.

Gaps, big or small, allow things through, but they also separate. Lots of people think, mistakenly, that the Wall is the border between England and Scotland, built to keep troublesome Scots at bay. I have both Scottish and Welsh genes, and like sitting on fences; you can see all sides.

Four thoughts. First, it was Hadrian's vanity project, his way of being remembered. Second, it never was a proper barrier, but porous, hence the deliberate inclusion of ways through, to allow for trade (porridge, whisky, kilts, bagpipes) to both Roman centurions and Sassenachs.

Third, around 425 million years ago, Scotland was part of North America, then Laurentia. What's now England was part of Eastern Avalonia, the other side of the Lapetus Ocean.

Fourth, long after these land-masses came together, in the early Middle Ages, the borders were part of the Kingdom of Rheged, straddling the wall, with inhabitants speaking Old Welsh, aka Cumbric.

Sad to say, borders still cause all sorts of bother, but are beloved of arms-manufacturers, like William First Baron Armstrong of Cragston, near Rothbury; and of rulers, politicians, bureaucrats and lawyers, who carve up countries and then stand back to watch the ensuing mayhem.

Like James I of England and VI of Scotland, who initiated the Plantation of Ulster in the early 17th century, and Arthur Balfour, whose eponymous 1917 Declaration preceded the creation of Israel.

Then there's Crimea, and Ukraine. Which brings me to the walled border town of Berwick-upon-Tweed, famously but mistakenly mentioned as still at war with Russia, being omitted from the 1856 treaty concluding the Crimean War. All because, back in the 17th century the town, being "of the kingdom, but not in it", was separately mentioned in Royal Proclamations, Statutes and the Book of Common Prayer.

Amusing once, not so now, as demonstrated by recent work by the ceramic artist Paddy Hartley, whose studio lies just inside the protecting embrace of Berwick's great Elizabethan ramparts.

An artist of international repute, his work addresses issues relating to the history of medicine, conflict and remembrance. Commissions include residencies at the Victoria & Albert Museum and the National Maritime Museum at Greenwich.

Recently he undertook a prestigious commission to commemorate the 125th Anniversary of the Swiss pharmaceutical company Hoffmann La-Roche.

Undertaken, appropriately, as Covid swept the planet, Paddy writes: "The notion at the forefront of my mind whilst developing the artwork and reiterated by my collaborators at Roche, was that wherever possible, healthcare and in particular the pharmaceutical industry should aim to add life to years, and not years to life. To improve the quality of life rather than to extend it".

It culminated in a touring solo exhibition and retrospective, 'The Cost of Life', addressing challenges facing the pharmaceutical industry and society, premiered in Basel in 2021 and then toured to Riga, Latvia. Paddy's time in Latvia, spring 2022, coincided with the Russian attack on Ukraine. Directly across the street from the Russian Embassy in Riga the Vi Pauls Stradi Museum of Medical History was adorned with a Putin Death Skull banner.

Emblematic of the bravery, boldness, dark humour and resilience of Ukrainians and Baltic nations both, it became a catalyst for his most recent body of work 'Hex on Thou Zee' or 'A Curse on your War'.

His reaction was horror and fear, but not helplessness. Instead he created totemic ceramic sculptures, grotesque mannikins, redolent of Bosch, Bacon, and, in our time, Peter Howson. Visceral, splanchnic even (no, I didn't either!), they include a series called 'Got to Be a Joker He Do What He Please', from The Beatles song 'Come Together', highlighting the dangers of mania which would be comic if not so tragic.

King Sausage. (2023). From the series 'Hex On Thou Zee' or 'Tool, of the Devil' Assembled Slipcast earthenware paperclay, glaze, on-glaze decals, platinum lustre. Photo Paddy Hartley

Ironic that just as the pandemic delivered a wake-up call to humanity that we're all in this together, calling for international cooperation, world rulers continue to initiate more destruction and loss of life, all with a carbon footprint that puts climate change denial in the shade.

With so many countries pursuing policies that represent an 'Up Yours!' to people and planet, it's humans that need to change, isn't it? As James Lovelock said, Gaia will look after herself, and, if we can't do the same, well, so be it!

More common sense would be a good place to start; followed by more connection, and less separation. Time to look at things differently, like the Irishman who defined a net as "a lot of holes tied together with string!"

For holes, read nations and, for strings, try borders.

EIGHT ARTISTS – One universal theme... Trees, bound together by the roots. These artists have come together for a new show opening at Edinburgh's City Arts Centre into the New Year.

From all over the world, the artists unite in the concept that now we need our bond with nature to be stronger than ever before. Everything, from special scents inspired by the first ever forest fire, to films about bark, resonates around trees.

Deep Rooted unveils work by Dalziel + Scullion, Anya Gallaccio, Andy Goldsworthy, Andrew Mackenzie, Naomi McIntosh, Katie Paterson and Hanna Tuulikki. Together they explore the relationship between people and how the relationship to nature has changed in the last years.

The artworks range from surround-sound audio and digital choreography to paintings and photographs to hand-crafted objects made from wood.

Some of the works touch on current ecological issues, others look at exploring the fragile relationships that co-exist with nature and capture its beauty.

Two photographs by Andy Goldsworthy capture ephemeral works made in nature, with the artist using his own body, as well as materials and conditions he encounters in a place. Goldsworthy often spends hours photographing the changes that occur as a work responds to time, weather, decay, growth and light.

Dalziel + Scullion's photographic series Unknown Pines, looks at the bark surfaces of six different species of pine tree which are also shown alongside their film Imprint.

Naomi McIntosh, an artist who works mainly in wood and is based in the Cairngorms National Park, looks at the passing of time, seasonality and the ever-present experience of nature.

One of her artworks in the show, Lost Song, is a series of vessels made from charred wood, which reveal the bird song of five globally threatened species, which are now in decline due to changes in agricultural practices and loss of habitat.

Andrew Mackenzie's paintings start with an experience of somewhere he went on a walk or field trip. They combine architectural forms such as fencing and metal structures with organic vistas. The four works in Deep Rooted show a woodland near the artist's home, where trees were felled by the horrific storm Arwen in 2021.

Scottish artist, Katie Paterson collaborates with scientists and researchers across the globe, which consider our spot on Earth in the context of geological time and change.

Her artwork To Burn, Forest, Fire looks at the scent of the 'first-ever forest' on Earth, and the scent of the 'last forest' through the creation of bespoke incense sticks.

Anya Gallaccio is also known for creating ephemeral artworks, often using organic materials, which illustrate the fragile challenges of life cycles. She also employs more traditional materials as a means of pausing the effects of time and preserving living matter. Her work I Can't Get No has two holly twigs cast in bronze with red glass berries, a transformation that provides immunity from decay.

Deep Rooted is accompanied by an illustrated exhibition catalogue with an essay by the writer and arts critic Sarah Urwin Jones.

After lockdowns and the effects of the pandemic many people became more attached to their own park, allotment, woods and forests with a fervour never before known, who knows where the Trees will lead us next!

Ten years for Portobello's Easel

LAST MONTH, the Velvet Easel Gallery, located on Portobello High Street, celebrated its tenth anniversary. Since opening its doors in 2013, the gallery has flourished and established itself within the growing art scene in Edinburgh and beyond, developing a reputation for its curated mixed exhibitions showcasing an eclectic range of modern art by local, Scottish and international artists.

Each exhibition offers a range of ceramics, sculpture, glass and jewellery. This contemporary gallery aims to present a programme of exhibitions throughout the year, including solo-shows and group exhibitions by emerging as well as established artists from all artistic backgrounds.

Jane Grant took over ownership of the gallery some three and a half years ago. She told ArtWork: "I was, and am, delighted to have taken over ownership of The Velvet Easel Gallery. During my 22 year career as an occupational therapist I have utilised art and creative activities as a therapeutic tool, and have always understood the importance of art and the creative process."

"The transition to gallery owner just after lockdown was interesting, enjoyable and challenging in equal measure! We are fortunate to have a very supportive customer base, and it was great to meet them during that difficult period.

"When I took over the gallery, I brought in a much larger range of more affordable/accessible glass, jewellery, gifts, ceramics etc. This was to help us through the Covid crisis, and I think it has served us well as we have a much larger footfall in the gallery, and lots of locals who have never previously set foot in the place as they felt it was out of their price range.

"Becoming a member of the Own Art Scheme in February 2022 was also part of our strategy to make original art and craft more accessible and affordable, whether it's a first time purchase or an addition to an expanding art collection, and has been well used by our customers, many purchasing their first piece of original art.

"Our customer base consists of a large number of local repeat customers, plus customers from all over

Edinburgh, East Lothian, the rest of Scotland and the UK. Many of our customers come across us through our website, and we regularly ship paintings all around the world. We continue to support small makers and designers (all based in the UK) when we purchase stock items, and we constantly source new makers and items to keep our offering 'fresh' for those that shop with us regularly.

"We have a regular core group of artists that exhibit with us all year round. These include Garry Harper, Jackie Henderson, Ian Neill, Catriona Millar, Cherylene Dyer, Amanda Owenson, Alan Richmond, Amanda Phillips, Louise Marks (to name a few) Recent emerging artists include Morven Ferguson (a recent graduate) and Zuzanna Salamon (who has gone on to be selected for the Royal Academy exhibitions two summers in a row). "I really enjoy meeting the incredibly talented artists who exhibit with us, in addition to welcoming many new artists to the gallery. I am very lucky to be able to spend my days at work surrounded by so much amazing and inspiring artwork.

"The Velvet Easel Gallery forms part of a wide range of established independent businesses that make up Portobello High Street, helping to establish Portobello as a destination that offers something for everyone. The gallery is proud to sponsor local events including Artwalk Party and Porty Pride, as well as our fundraising for St. Columba's Hospice through our annual Portobello Art Calendar. We select images of Portobello themed paintings that have been exhibited in the gallery during the year, and we donate £ 1 from each calendar to St. Columba's Hospice. The gallery has also sponsored an award for emerging artists through the Paisley Art Institute."

Jane concludes: "I'd like to thank all our talented artists, loyal customers, dedicated staff and the local community for their continued support which has helped us reach this happy milestone. And I'm looking forward to the next ten years!"

Forty years on – in France too!

JUST NOW the Picasso Museum in Antibes, have dedicated five rooms on one level to the works of the Belgian painter Yves Zurstrassen.

The title of the exhibition 'Playing Painting' reflects the artist and his work. The painter enjoys adding and subtracting the layers of paint so that we no longer know which colour was painted first. It is a kind of collage style that he uses, influenced in many ways by Kurt Schwitters

A self-taught painter, who originally studied Graphic design he is adept at colour and abstraction. He has developed his own technique of collages and take-offs. He layers different shapes of papers like stencils while painting through them.

"Everyone knows about collage, well for me, it's takeoff. These are paper stencils that I use. I paint or screen print through these paper holes. At the end, I remove them and what is left is what went through the holes, simply," laughs Yves Zurstrassen.

Zurstrassen is obsessive about jazz too, all his jazz records are carefully filed in brown boxes in his massive industrial space studio where he also lives in Belgium. He likes to paint while listening to jazz, and his paintings look rather like how jazz might be in paintings too, with a kind of Jackson Pollock twist.

"When I close the studio door, a whole universe can open up. It is extraordinary. I really have the feeling of going on a trip. Of going into space, and often at night, when I paint on the edge of sleep. I feel like I am flying, flying away, a bit like Native American Indians who mentally went into space by scrutinising the cosmos," Zurstrassen explains.

Out of a thousand works by the Belgian artist, the exhibition curator at Picasso Museum chose 94. He also decided to design the exhibition in sequences.

"There is no real timeline between the first and last rooms. There are ten years of painting roughly speaking. I really designed the exhibition for this museum," explains Jean-Louis Andral, curator of the exhibition and curator of the Picasso Museum.

Check it out - it won't take you 40 years to see it - that's one thing!
